Brian specialises in intellectual property dispute resolution. His practice is divided equally between patents and other intellectual property rights.

Brian's patents practice has involved cases for sectors ranging from electronics to biotechnology, with most of his experience acquired in the pharmaceutical field. On the brands side, Brian has acted in many disputes relating to trade marks, copyright and registered designs. He has a particular interest in interim relief practice and procedure.

Brian is presently engaged in a life cycle management project for one of the world's best-selling pharmaceutical products. This involves the co-ordination of legal teams in more than thirty countries across the world to ensure that optimal strategy is pursued at both global and local levels. He is also involved in several intellectual property cases in the English Courts across a broad range of industry sectors.

Brian is the co-author of an annual review of UK patent cases which is published annually in the CIPA Journal. He lectures widely on all aspects of intellectual property law.
